PERFORMANCE ATTRIBUTION OF TARGET FUND

The portfolio underperformed the index for the period.

Security selection was a driver of relative underperformance. Weak selection in information technology, communication services and consumer discretionary was partially offset by selection in materials, financials and utilities. Sector allocation, a result of our bottom-up stock selection process, also detracted from returns. Allocation effect was driven by our underweight to energy, but partially offset by our underweight to consumer staples and overweight to financials.

At the issuer level, our top two relative contributors were an overweight to Schlumberger and not owning Tesla, while our top two relative detractors were an overweight to Airbnb and an out of benchmark allocation to B&M European Value Retail.

Shares of Schlumberger, an oil services company, rose over the period along with other oil producer and services companies. The industry has been supported by rising demand for oil, soaring commodity prices and geopolitical uncertainty regarding Russia's invasion of Ukraine, all of which should support elevated margins and earnings. Shares of Airbnb ended the period lower despite reporting both first-quarter revenue and second-quarter guidance above expectations. The vacation rental company also announced it is shutting down operations in China, choosing instead to focus on outbound Chinese tourism in the Asia-Pacific region, as the country continues its aggressive Zero-COVID policy. Rentals in China account for just 1% of Airbnb's revenue.

OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY OF TARGET FUND

Markets ended May roughly flat after experiencing a dip at the start of the month as persistent inflation, supply chain disruptions, and labor shortages weighed on full-year guidance. Investor sentiment became moderately less negative as the month wore on as demand looks to be softening on the back of rising rates. While we expect sticky inflation through at least the end of the year, we believe we are near peak inflation in the US and that international markets are not far behind. That being said, the path of inflation over the next few quarters will depend on the degree of consumer fall back, as central banks raise interest rates and consumer confidence in most countries hooks down, and the extent to which the weakness in China is exported.

At this time we continue to anticipate a challenging second quarter market environment driven by peak inflation, monetary tightening, impacts from the war in Ukraine, and lingering effects of Chinese COVID lockdowns. However, some of these effects may start easing in the second half of the year, particularly in Europe, where we remain overweight versus the benchmark, as fiscal stimulus from the war kicks in. We also anticipate that most emerging markets will benefit from a positive commodity cycle, and we are not discounting the possibility for Central Bank tightening to become less negative on the margin as the year progresses. Lastly, we expect a pickup in Chinese activity in the fourth quarter supported by fiscal and monetary stimulus.

Given the macroeconomic backdrop, our factor positioning remains overweight quality and capital returns to shareholders (at 30% each) and underweight growth and valuation upside (at 20% each).

At the end of the period, our largest overweights were health care and information technology. We were most underweight to consumer discretionary and consumer staples. From a regional perspective, our largest overweights were North America and United Kingdom. We were most underweight to Emerging Markets and had no exposure to Japan.
